cided on where the ball passes out of playing territory, or where the ball is when it linally passes from the view of the umpire? Has there not been some change in this rule made in recent years? If so, please explain the nature of same.—C. A. C.

The rule governing the legality of a home run says that the umpire shall rule a hit over the fence or into the stands fair or foul according to where fair when it passed out of playing territory.

The rule originally was that the umpire should decide the hit on where he last saw the ball. At a meeting of the rules committee three years ago a change was made in the rule. It was ruled a home run if the ball

That means that if a ball was hit over the fence, and was 20 feet fair when it passed out of playing territory but curved into foul territory when it finally passed from the umpire's view, it would be a foul ball.

It is where the umpire last sees the ball rather than the fact it was fair when it passed out of playing.

baseball team here a month ago without much noise but today he is being taiked about by all the fans and is described by some as the greatest prospect in the Coast league in years.
And generally San Francisco fans need to be shown before they praise a recruit.

In the opening game against Seattle Valla fanned three times. Not discouraged he was given another chance and by the first part of this week his hitting ability and his marvelous speed have given him a batting percentage of .396.

Jack Miller, manager of the Seals, says Valla is one of the smartest boys in baseball and Jack McCarthy, former American league umplire, thinks Valla looks better than Ty Cobb did when he broke into the American league in 1905. Arnoid Statz, the fast Los Angeles player, was the league sensation.

Valla can play the infield and can hit and can run, in nearly every game he has beaten out one or more nits, for if the bail takes a couple of hops before it reaches an infielder the boy is sure to beat it to first.

Valla was born in Santa Cruz, Cal., but was raised in San Francisco
